Each of the great civilizations of the past contributed some way or another to enhance the technical level of human communities. They all achieved realizations that gradually transformed the destiny of nations and turned them to highly organized groups, having in their hands more efficient means that enabled them to develop a better capacity in the fight for survival and therefore to lead a more comfortable life.

The Chinese, for example, were among the first people to show to the others how to combine intelligence and discipline in order to construct a dynamic society able to offer to its inhabitants prosperity and security. The Egyptians in their turn managed to bring considerable improvements in the branches of farming, architecture, medicine, writing and religion. Despite the hostile environment where they evolved they succeeded to impose their will-power and perseverance so as to win the respect of their neighbours and immortalize their name in history.

As regards the Babylonians, they devoted their skills to further the spheres of astronomy, law-making, building, cattle-breeding, and land-working. The Phoenicians, too, helped in accomplishing exceptional advances in matters connected with ship-building, international trade and sailing across seas. When the Greeks arrived, they promoted mathematics, philosophy, and democracy. They also gave a strong impetus to scientific research, rational thinking, mythology and artistic creations. In their wisdom they went as far as using sport as a channel through which to consolidate peace and harmony among tribes and races. The Romans as well applied themselves for elevating the fate of the human race. They dedicated their talent for the pursuit of art, the construction of towns and public works, the laying of rules and political bodies, the expansion of commerce and the introduction of more effective strategies in the military field.

Parents in Queensland, Australia, have rejected the governmental suggestion that the school day be extended by two hours. They either disagree or strongly disagree with this suggestion considered to be made by a panel of federal education bureaucrats.

Parents want no change to the present school finishing time of 3 pm, especially for students in rural and remote areas. More than 80 per cent of a survey's respondents said that the school finishing time in these areas should remain the same, even if a longer day were introduced for students in metropolitan areas. Under the plan, the school day would be extended from 3 pm to 5 pm, with the extra hours at school providing supervised care for primary children and supervised study for high school students.

A slim majority of the informants, however, do support the idea of a one-hour teacher supervised period for homework completion starting after the normal schooling end of 3 pm. They argue that their school children spend too much time doing homework alone, that they do it in their bedrooms and that it has become stressful and counter-productive.

Most parents in Queensland, then, oppose the proposal and think their children would not like the two-hour idea either. They believe that even if the school day were lengthened, they would be happy to have their children supervised during those two hours by ancillary staff rather than teachers. Parents and Citizens Association president Garry Cislowksi said he was not surprised by parent opposition to a longer school day. "Using teachers as baby-sitters is a pretty expensive exercise," he said. "There are much better ways to deal with the need for outside-school-hour care. The Federal Government should stop mucking about and fund it."
